RELATIVE PRONOUNS

In defining relative clauses we:

- can omit the relative pronoun, but only as the object of the following verb. For example:

There is the man (who/whom/that) we met yesterday.

- cannot omit the relative pronoun if it serves as the subject of the following verb. For example:

She is an actress who/that was awarded an Oscar.

Category	Category1	Management	Likelihood of Cancer
0- Assessment	Incomplete Assessment	Additional imaging required	Not applicable yet

The code to generate a relationship similar to the previous one is: from Sklearn.metrics import classification_report target_names = [á € " Iris-silky ', á € " Iris-versicolor', á € " Iris-Virginica ' ] Print (classification_report ( IRISDATA [á € " CLASS '], KMEANS.LABELS , TARGET_NAMES = TARGET_NAMES)) The report shows the main classification metrics, precision, recall and f1-score per class. I would say that there is a need to look at these metrics for this problem, unless a given class is absolutely determined correctly. The fact is that the accuracy and recall are very used for unbalanced data sets, because in a very unbalanced data set, a precision of 99% can be insignificant. Positive and negative in this case are generic names for the scheduled classes. It is used to show the accuracy, recall, score F1 and the support of your trained classification model. The recall means Á «How many of this class are on the entire number of elements of this class» The precision will be «how many are correctly classified in that class» The score f1- is the harmonic average between precision and recall support It is the number of occurrences of the date class in your data set (so you have 37.5K of class 0 and 37.5K of class 1, which is a really well balanced data set. F1 Score F1 is the medium harmonic Weighted with precision and recall.
